An epic adventure into uncharted territory

TERRANOA

Join an international team of scientists and explorers and experience a real-life "Indiana Jones" adventure in 3D!

In early 2010, a group of scientists led by French explorer Evrard Wendenbaum, crossed a "time frontier" when moving deep into the canyons formed by the Makay mountain range in Madagascar. This natural barrier has been protecting unique ecosystems for millions of years and happens to be a true sanctuary for biodiversity.

Whether by helicopter, hot air balloon, inflatable boats or hidden on observation platform high up in the canopy, the film crew used every possible mean to access and capture this inhospitable environment.

Witness the unique biodiversity hidden in these canyons and discover prehistoric remains attesting of early human presence in the region. Meet surrounding inhabitants and their ancestral culture.

MADAGASCAR, THE LOST MAKAY is the unique tale of a scientific expedition combined with an incredible human adventure.
