SURVIVORS

DOCUMENTARY SERIES 52'

o eat or being eaten: the rule is simple. The different species that live in our world today have understood it and their life is a daily struggle to survive.

All of them are perfect example of what adaptation is, and this is the result of a million years natural selection process. Some species have developed incredible survival and defence mechanisms, whereas others have survived thanks to terribly cruel killing techniques.

All are descendents of a long line of survivors.

"The planet of Survivors" documentary series plunges us into the universe of those different species families that have known how to survive over time.

From the littlest insects to the most ferocious bears, including the amphibians and the underwater world, we will study how and why these species are still living before our very eyes.

COPRODUCTION BILDERFEST / DOCLAND YARD Format documentary series 52 minutes
